CLIMATE CHANGE TO BE CUT FROM REVIEWS

I President Donald Trump is set to sign an order to greatly reduce the role climate change plays in decision making across the U.S. government, Bloomberg reported, citing a person familiar with the administration's plan. The order, which could be signed this week, aims to reverse former Democratic President Barack Obama's broad approach for addressing climate change, the report said. The directive will urge the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to undo the Clean Power Plan, the Bloomberg report said. The Clean Power Plan is Obama's centerpiece initiative to combat climate change, requiring states to slash emissions of carbon dioxide, but it was never implemented due to legal challenges launched by several Republican states. REUTERS

MILITARY HEADS GRILLED OVER NUDE PHOTOS

2 Senators grilled the Navy and the Marine Corps' top leaders amid a growing scandal involving a private Facebook group and its surreptitious distribution of explicit images of women in the armed forces — often with obscene, misogynist commentary. The Facebook group, called "Marines United," is reported to have nearly 30,000 followers, including active-duty U.S. Marines, Marine Corps veterans and British Royal Marines. "If we can't crack Facebook, how are we supposed to be able to confront Russian aggression and cyberhacking throughout our military?" Democratic Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand asked during a Senate Armed Services Committee Hearing. Gillibrand said online harassment had become evident as early as 2013 and military leaders were made aware of it but have still been unable to stop it. REUTERS

ROCKET LAUNCH IN FLA. DELAYED DUE TO WINDS

3 Space Exploration Technologies, or SpaceX, on Tuesday delayed the launch of a rocket set to carry a commercial communications satellite into orbit, because of high winds at its Florida launch site. Wind gusts of up to 25 mph at NASA's Kennedy Space Center in Florida forced SpaceX to scrub the launch of the Falcon 9 rocket that was to have put into orbit EchoStar XXIII, a commercial communications satellite for EchoStar Corporation, the privately owned company said on social network Twitter. "Standing down due to high winds; working toward next available launch opportunity," the company messaged moments after the launch window opened. REUTERS

FRANCE'S FILLON UNDER FRAUD INVESTIGATION

4 French presidential candidate Francois Fillon was put under formal investigation by magistrates on suspicion of embezzling state funds — a move that may ruin the right-winger's hopes of winning power in May. Fillon's campaign has been dogged by allegations he lavishly paid his British wife Penelope and two of his children hundreds of thousands of euros of public money for assistance, but he has refused to pull out of the presidential race. The former prime minister had been due to meet investigators on Wednesday but, in a surprise move, the meeting was brought forward by 24 hours. The 63-year-old conservative candidate was put under formal investigation on suspicion of diverting public funds, complicity in misappropriating funds, receiving the funds and not declaring assets fully, a judicial source said. REUTERS

Stella blasts Boston with powerful winds and foot of snow

The mayor announced that public schools will remain closed today.

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroNewYork
erin.tiernan@metr.us

Tuesday's blizzard dumped almost a foot of snow on Boston, but it was the strong winds and freezing rain that proved far more ferocious.

Despite getting fewer inches than expected, Mayor Marty Walsh said Winter Storm Stella still delivered as far as wind and ice were concerned.

"We're not getting the accumulation we thought we were going to have, but conditions are as if we were getting 20 inches of snow," Walsh said during an afternoon news conference. "I'm looking out the window right now and it's still coming down sideways."

The National Weather Service reported wind gusts of up to 54 mph in Boston, and into the 70s in other parts of Massachusetts. In Wellfleet, gusts were reported at 79 mph, which is hurricane force, the NWS said.

Stella blew through much of the Northeast on Tuesday, dumping more than 2 feet of snow in places, cutting power to thousands and forcing the cancellation of more than 6,000 flights at airports.

As snow turned to sleet and freezing rain Tuesday evening, Walsh announced Boston Public Schools would remain closed for a second day today.

"I don't want kids and young children walking around on icy streets that might not be shoveled. Kids are kids and I don't want them to put themselves into harm's way," Walsh said.

All standalone Boston Centers for Youth and Families will be open as a resource for children of parents who still have to go to work.

Freezing temperatures are expected to return by week's end, with more snow a possibility on Sunday.

Walsh said the major focus Wednesday and in the days ahead would be to get roads cleared down to the pavement.

"So if we do get another storm, it won't be like it was a couple years ago," he said.

Winds in excess of 50 mph knocked down trees and powerlines across the city, cutting power to 1,450 Bostonians. About half were still without power during the late afternoon on Tuesday.

"We expect that number to go up because of the heavy snow that's falling now," the mayor said on Tuesday. "When you have snow on trees, ice on trees, eventually some of these are going to come down."

In one particularly frightening near-miss, a tractor trailer skidded and jackknifed on the Zakim Bridge around noon. It was caught on the bridge surveillance camera. No one was injured.

More than 400 planes were grounded at Logan Airport throughout the day Tuesday as winds in excess of 50 mph howled through Boston, but trains and buses were up and running.

As the MBTA took on its second test since investing more than $100 million in winter weather preparedness, passengers experienced few weather-related delays, officials said.

Power outages delayed Orange line riders for about an hour and a downed tree near Quincy station slowed Red line riders.

"The T had a good day," spokesman Joe Pesaturo said.

Lawmakers, pot activists at odds over work of new marijuana committee

Pro-pot groups say legislation hampering legalization

Marijuana activists are responding to what they call a "false narrative" that the new marijuana legalization law requires legislative fixes.

Activists are urging the new marijuana committee to focus instead on issues not addressed in the ballot law.

"The new law requires no legislative fixes," said Jim Borghesani, who acted as communications director for the successful Yes on 4 campaign. "It is a carefully written and researched measure that creates a regulatory body and gives that body full authority to write all rules regarding product safety, packaging, labeling, applications and permitting, security, signage, and all other aspects of the new industry."

Lawmakers over the years have largely avoided altering ballot laws, but they seem eager to change the marijuana law. That's likely to trigger constant debate over whether their recommendations go too far.

The Cannabis Control Commission, the regulatory body established to oversee the legal marijuana industry, has not yet been appointed and the deadline for Treasurer Deborah Goldberg to select its members was extended six months by the legislature. Borghesani this week urged the legislature to fund the CCC immediately so commissioners "can begin their crucial work of writing the regulations that will govern the industry."

Gov. Charlie Baker this week defended the process they have set out for implementation of legal marijuana, pledging that any legislative tweaks will not prevent adults from legally buying marijuana.

"We will abide by the will of the voters and there will be the legal sale of marijuana in the state. Having said that, I think we do have some work to do relative to regulation, relative to taxation and the like," said House Speaker Robert DeLeo, an opponent of the legalization question. Senate President Stanley Rosenberg likened the process to the one the legislature followed when it implemented its 2011 expanded gaming law and pointed out that the marijuana law voters OK'ed was written almost two years ago.

"You need to set the foundation as best you can from the very beginning. Changing rules as this thing evolves will make it only more difficult and more complicated," said Rosenberg, who supported the ballot question.

"It is not our intention to undermine the will of the voters," he added. "It is our intention to get it right and so we leave it to the good judgment of the committee to come up with recommendations on things that may not be in the ballot question at all that should have been addressed as well as fine tuning some items that are in there, again, without undermining the fundamental intent of the question."

Baker said the legislature's decision to delay implementation of the retail marijuana market until July 2018 was "a good one" and backed the approach the Marijuana Policy Committee has staked out, citing conversations he's had with officials in states that legalized marijuana before Massachusetts.

Adorable BBC viral family opens up

The internet's favorite family is here, and they're speaking out about going viral.

Robert Kelly, an expert on East Asian affairs, Skyped in once again to BBC — but this time he was joined by his wife Kim Jung-A and their little ones intentionally.

Honestly, they seem embarrassed by the attention while their daughter, ever the real star of the show these people call their daily lives, bumbles about being super cute and noncooperative. "It's a comedy of errors," Kelly recalls fondly of the viral video. "[Our daughter] was in a hippity-hoppity mood."

Someone get this girl her own show, please.

Alison Brie and Dave Franco tie the knot

Another day, another low-key, quiet marriage. People reports that actors Dave Franco, 31, and Alison Brie, 34, have secretly wed. At this point, do celebrities get married any other way?

The couple has notoriously stayed under the radar during the entirety of their relationship, but Brie — who you might remember from "Community" or "Mad Men" — opened up last year about finding the strong-eyebrowed love of her life. "Marriage never really interested me, I guess because I was very focused on my work," she told Yahoo! Style. "I just met that person that I was like, 'Well, I'm really in love with you, and would like to grow old with you.'"

Aw. The couple announced their engagement in August 2015 after three years of dating. They met at a Mardi Gras parade in New Orleans which, somehow, seems about right. Honestly, maybe we should all be finding love at debaucherous, colorful celebrations in sweaty, party cities. It's not the worst idea.

Rachel Lindsay has a high tolerance for BS

Our long national nightmare — the 21st season of "The Bachelor" — is finally over. But "The Bachelorette" has just begun, and it already looks like it's going to be one of those terrifying waking dreams that you can't quite snap out of.

Even though it's 2017, the franchise is proving that it has no idea how to deal with race. And Rachel Lindsay, who is making major waves as the first black Bachelorette, is already dealing with some racially charged skullduggery. When "The Bachelorette" introduced a handful of the contestants who would be vying for Lindsay's heart, things took an awkward, supremely ignorant turn.

Some future contestant/random dude named Dean had this to say upon meeting his maybe future wife: "I'm ready to go black, and I'm never going back." Ex-squeeze me?

Lindsay handled it with poise and grace because she's a professional, I guess. But according to Refinery29, Twitter wasn't having it.

Can we all just agree that this upcoming season is probably going to go up in flames?

I, for one, can't wait.

What Amber Tamblyn named her daughter

Remember sweet baby Mustard Witch? Turns out Amber Tamblyn and husband David Cross were trolling us all with that birth announcement. Called it!

Tamblyn, 33, took to Instagram to share her daughter's real name — and a sweet letter that Hillary Clinton wrote the tot.

Writing about the letter, which essentially congratulates Marlow Alice Cross on being so brave as to be born, Tamblyn says, "A letter from one spectacular woman who has lived so much to another who has only just begun. My heart is as full as this diaper I'm about to change."

This baby is not even a month old, and she's getting letters from the lady who was supposed to be president.

I see you, Marlow. Doing the damn thing while still in diapers. Good on you.

'Get Out' star has some words for Samuel L. Jackson

Have you guys seen "Get Out?" It's made nearly $100 million at the box office, so I'm guessing yes. I saw it, and I liked it. Apparently, Samuel L. Jackson liked it, too. Except for one thing.

According to Vulture, the film prompted Jackson to stumble into the Hot 97 radio station and wonder aloud what "Get Out" would have been like "with an American brother who really feels that."

The film stars Daniel Kaluuya, a black British actor with Ugandan parents who probably has never experienced racism or racial tension or a series of racially charged microaggressions or anything.

Now, Kaluuya, 27, is talking to GQ and airing his own frustrations. "Big up to Samuel L. Jackson ... here's the thing about that critique though ... I've had to wrestle with people going, 'You're too black.' Then I come to America and they say, 'You're not black enough.'" He continued, "I resent that I have to prove that I'm black."

Jim Broadbent on that time he won an Oscar

The acclaimed actor and "Bridget Jones" dad talks about his new drama "The Sense of an Ending" and not feeling like he's gotten much wiser with age.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Jim Broadbent's memories of winning an Oscar are a little fuzzy. It was 2002, and the acclaimed English actor won Best Supporting Actor for "Iris," in which he played the older version of writer John Bayley opposite Judi Dench, as novelist Iris Murdoch. Then again, who needs a memory? After all, there's video of it, right there on YouTube.

"I've never watched that," Broadbent says, chuckling. "I think I'd probably be embarrassed to see it again. Quite a lot of that has to do with how

Charlotte Rampling and Jim Broadbent play ex-lovers in "The Sense of an Ending," in theaters Friday. CBS/UMS

I forgot to thank two of the producers during my acceptance speech. I don't like to remind myself of that."

Broadbent is a man of many faces. He can be over-the-top, as in "Moulin Rouge!" He can be lovable, as the dad of the "Bridget Jones" films.

And he can be gritty; he's made four theatrical features with the legendary Mike Leigh. (That includes "Topsy-Turvy," our favorite of his turns.)

The real Broadbent, though, is shy, quiet, modest almost to a fault. His sentences trail off, and they're filled with nervous chuckles. When you get him going, though, he can be philosophical and insightful, and very honest about life and about himself. You get the sense that he takes a diversity of roles to explore how everyone else lives.

So it goes with "The Sense of an Ending," a too-rare film with Broadbent at the center. He plays Tony Webster, a retired divorcee who flashes back to his youth when he learns about the passing of an old acquaintance. He starts to reflect on a life of regrets, of failures, some of them romantic, all while chatting with (and sometimes bothering) his ex-wife (Harriet Walker) and an old flame (Charlotte Rampling). Based on the novel by Julian Barnes, it deals a hero who hasn't gained much confidence with age.

"He's actually not really grown-up," Broadbent says. "A lot of us older people who like to think we're mature and grown-up and know what we're about, I think we're still anxious and vulnerable and as arrogant and flawed as when we were 20. We just get better at disguising it, really. We become better at editing our life and behaving, supposedly, properly. But we're still as complicated as we were when we were students, in many ways."

That's a feeling some of us suspect is true even as early as in our 30s. "I'm constantly astonished that I'm 67 years old and approaching 70. I think I'm just starting to think maybe somewhere down the line I'll get the hang of things. You never feel you've gotten there, that you've achieved any sort of wisdom."

"Sorry to lay that on you," he adds, chuckling again.

The couple that works together

Real-life power team Tatiana Maslany and Tom Cullen play lovers in "The Other Half."

ABBEY BENDER
benders@metro.us

Working with your significant other can be a tricky thing. Not for Tatiana Maslany and Tom Cullen. Partners since 2011, the "Orphan Black" and "Downton Abbey" alums finally got to share the screen in "The Other Half," an indie in which she plays a woman with bipolar disorder and he a violent drifter mourning the disappearance of his brother. The two become an item, even as problems arise.

Does being a couple off-screen make playing an intense couple on screen easier or harder?

Tatiana Maslany: Because we know each other really well we have a shorthand and immense love and support. There's a huge amount of safety, and we won't settle for dishonesty. As artists that's a great place to work from. I can't trick Tom. He knows who I am; he knows when I'm lying. I think that opens those emotional territories in an easier way, and it's quite joyful to go there.

Tom Cullen and Tatiana Maslany play a drifter and a woman with bipolar disorder who strike up a hectic romance in "The Other Half," now on VOD. BRAIN- STORM MEDIA

What was it like playing a character with bipolar disorder? What steps did you take to avoid clichés?

Maslany: Joey [Klein, the filmmaker] did an amazing amount of research drawing from life experience as well as clinical studies. He wanted to make sure we were telling it honestly. We didn't want Emily's illness to be a romantic thing. It's who she is, and it's something she deals with every day in different forms. And you don't want to demonize it. It was about making sure we got it right clinically and then allowing for the impulses on the day.

What are some favorite performances or films you looked to for inspiration?

Tom Cullen: I'm inspired by actors who surprise me and try to scare themselves in their work. People like Marlon Brando.

Maslany: Joey cited "A Woman Under the Influence" as a big inspiration. He showed it to us and it's amazing. I kept going back to it when I felt stuck. The work is so free and complicated and bizarre.

You both act on television. What are some of the differences going from television to film?

Maslany: It's dependent on the project. For this one we had a lot of freedom. There wasn't a separation between us and the crew; it was a very communal experience. I don't know that you always get that on television.

Cullen: Television's restrictive because you're often playing in the style of the show. You're in service to so many other things, and making something that appeals to a bigger demographic. With film, you have a lot more space and freedom to make something personal.

If you're not having sex, you're not alone. Here are a few tricks to get back in the saddle. istock

How to have more sex

Sexperts weigh in on how to cure a dry spell.

SHARON FEIEREISEN
letters@metro.us

Skipping ice cream and hitting the gym may not be most people's idea of fun, but few would argue the merits of having sex — an activity that's pleasurable and good for you. But as with most enjoyable pastimes, life and all of its stressors often get in the way. So, it may not surprise you that according to a study published in the journal Archives of Sexual Behavior, Americans' sex lives have been drastically declining in recent years.

If this statement applies to you, break the cycle! We spoke with three sexperts to get their tips on what you can do ... to do it more often.

Love yourself naked

Project Soulmate matchmakers Jennifer Zucher and Lori Zaslow say it's important to feel confident and not be afraid to make the first move. "If you love yourself and feel sexy then you will be more confident in the bedroom, which will turn your partner on," says Zucher. "So be comfortable in your own skin and wear lingerie that makes you feel sexy."

Ditch the bed

"It's important to mix up where you're having sex to keep things interesting and keep your partner on their toes. Try the kitchen table, bathroom and balcony — be creative!" says Zucher. You can also try role playing. Ask your partner their fantasies and make them into a reality — and don't just act out the part, dress for it, too, she says.

Plan for spontaneity

"We're all busy and sometimes we even have to schedule our sex lives," says Tristan Weedmark, We-Vibe's "global passion ambassador."

"So planning and talking to your partner about your mutual openness for quickies lets you take advantage of those 10 minutes that just freed up in your schedules."

Try something new

Don't get stuck in a sexual rut. Instead of being bummed out, take it as an opportunity to inject some novelty into your routine. Weedmark suggests visiting a couples-friendly adult store together. "The point is to find a new product that will be a bonding experience and to give you both a laugh or two."

Show affection

Terri Cole, relationship expert and the founder of the Real Love Revolution, says there are many small ways to show your partner you're still into her. "To reignite the heat, I suggest leaving sweet/sexy notes in pockets, briefcase, under a pillow, etc.," she says. Or, go big: "Get a hotel room, add lingerie to the mix or give a full-body massage that leads to slow, hot sex."

FIVE THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT COLORECTAL CANCER

Colorectal cancer is the fourth most common cancer in the U.S., with more than 136,000 new patients diagnosed last year. But thanks to increased awareness about screenings, the death rate from colorectal cancer has been dropping for more than 20 years.

For the most part, colorectal cancer is a curable and preventable disease. It is a cancer for which there is very good data that shows screening prevents disease and saves lives.

With March marking Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month, here are the answers to some key questions about the disease:

1. What are the risk factors for colorectal cancer?

Age and gender can increase the chance of developing colorectal cancer. Other risk factors include:

- A family history of colon or rectal cancer
- A personal history of cancer in the colon, rectum, ovary, endometrium, or breast
- A history of polyps (small pieces of bulging tissue) in the colon or rectum
- A history of ulcerative colitis or Crohn's disease
- Certain hereditary conditions
- Obesity
- Sedentary lifestyle
- Certain dietary factors, including high intake of red and processed meat

2. How do doctors screen for colorectal cancer?

Aside from a physical exam to check general signs of health, other screening options include a fecal occult blood test, a double contrast barium enema (lower GI series), a sigmoidoscopy, a colonoscopy or a virtual colonoscopy.

3. How often should you be screened?

For most patients, screening is recommended to start at age 50. However, if you have a family history or other risk factors for colorectal cancer, you should discuss with your doctor whether you should start screening earlier.

The frequency of the screening will depend on which test was used to screen, what was found, and your risk factors for colorectal cancer. It is important to know that these screening guidelines refer to patients with no concerning signs or symptoms. If you have blood in your stool, for example, you should consult with your doctor.

4. What are the symptoms of colorectal cancer?

One of the most common signs of colorectal cancer is a change in bowel habits or blood in the stool. Others include:

- Diarrhea, constipation, or feeling that the bowel does not empty completely

- Stools that are narrower than usual
- Frequent gas pains, bloating, fullness, or cramps
- Weight loss for no known reason
- Persistent tiredness
- Vomiting

5. How is colorectal cancer treated?

Surgery to remove the cancer is the most common treatment for all stages of colorectal cancer. There are several different types of surgery that can be performed depending on the cancer stage and location. If surgery is not sufficient, a doctor may also decide to use chemotherapy and/or radiation therapy.

Pick these 5 NCAA Tournament upsets on your March Madness bracket

Don't be afraid to take some big swings when picking your 2017 bracket.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

Every year, millions of college basketball fans pick their brackets, act timidly when choosing a 14, 13 or 12 seed to advance, and then kick themselves when they watch it happen (or half watch it happen while pretending to work on the best Thursday and Friday in all of sports).

This year there is the potential for upset specials up and down the four regions, and below we'll break down the five most likely. Pick them if you dare.

We think Florida Gulf Coast has the potential to be Cinderellas again. GETTY IMAGES

No. 12 UNC Wilmington over No. 5 Virginia

When big upsets occur, they almost always startle a big conference juggernaut that didn't see it coming. In No. 5 Virginia's case, the writing is on the wall. UNCW has a prolific offense while the Cavaliers rely on a stout defense. But Virginia is young and their defense can falter, as it did toward the end of the season. The 22-10 Cavs lost six of eight, then won four in a row, but then fell to Notre Dame by 15 points in the ACC Tournament. The Irish play very similarly to the Seahawks. Ranking 27th in RPI, 29-5 UNCW is better than a 12, and could do some real damage.

No. 14 Florida Gulf Coast over No. 3 Florida State

One of the most exciting upsets in college hoops history was when No. 15 Florida Gulf Coast, in one of its first seasons ever as a Division I team, shocked No. 2 Georgetown in 2013. The program has since become a powerhouse in the Atlantic Sun and have won 19 of their last 21 games heading into the tournament. They won the regular season and tournament crown and have their eyes set on upsetting in-state rivals the Seminoles. FGCU (26-7) scores nearly all of its points inside the arc and shoots over 57 percent on 2-pointers. Florida State (25-8) faltered in its conference tournament, dropping in the ACC finals to Notre Dame. This could be Cinderella part two if Florida Gulf Coast converts a high volume of high-percentage shots.

No. 12 Middle Tennessee over No. 5 Minnesota

The Gophers showed some big weaknesses in the Big 10 Tournament as they were picked apart by eventual champions Michigan. They barely average six more points than their opponents and have been OK, not great, against ranked teams. Only four times since 1985 has at least one No. 12 seed failed to defeat a five-seed in a single tournament and Middle Tennessee, ranked with the 35th best RPI in the nation could be the best bet for one of these such upsets. MTSU went 30-4 this season and beat Vanderbilt by 23 points. According to fivethirtheight.com they have a 48 percent chance of winning, among the best for any underdog.

No. 11 Xavier over No. 6 Maryland

These two teams are incredibly evenly matched, as Xavier sports an RPI rank of 36 while Maryland is 34th.

The Musketeers are big and can rebound as good as any team in the nation. Despite going just 9-9 in the Big East, they played a difficult schedule and have a favorable matchup in the first round. Maryland relies on guard play, particularly that of leading scorer Melo Tremble. Battling in the below-average Big 10, Maryland has lost six of its last 10 games, a trend it will fight hard to buck when things tip off Thursday.

No. 11 Rhode Island over No. 6 Creighton

The A-10 has historically had a good track record in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, and the Rhodies appear best suited to be the conference representative in the Round of 32. No. 11 seeds in the tourney are just 13-15 since 2010. Both Creighton and Rhode Island (24-9) made deep conference tournament runs and are playing some of their best ball. Each has RPI and BPI numbers inside the top 35, with Rhode Island boasting a 3-1 record against AP top 25 squads. They are also 10-2 in their last 12, in comparison to the Blue Jays (25-9) who are 6-6 in that span.

Aries What appears to be an impulsive move to some will in truth be well-planned and executed. Don't let someone's uncertainty cause you to doubt a personal decision.

Taurus Take control of situations that concern your assets, health or occupation. Don't wait to see what happens, when you should step up and manipulate the situation.

Gemini Stay focused on building your assets. Professional changes will put you in a better position to rise to the top. Invest in what you want to pursue.

Cancer An unusual destination will prompt you to consider options that you have neglected to explore in the past. Don't limit what you can do.

Leo Be careful when moving forward. Get all the facts before making a commitment. Anger will take charge if you let someone get away with something.

Virgo Take the initiative to set your plans in motion. Being proactive will pay off and show others that you mean business. It's what you do, not what you say, that counts.

Libra Money matters will lead to emotional stress and uncertainty. Joint ventures will not turn out as hoped, leaving you in a precarious position if you didn't take precautions.

Scorpio Emotional matters will creep up on you. Look for alternative ways to deal with trouble. Explosive tactics will not bring you the satisfaction you need to move forward.

Sagittarius The help you offer others will put you in a good position. Sharing experiences with colleagues will ensure that you avoid facing certain problems.

Capricorn Don't get involved in situations that require force or that present a physical challenge. Protect against insult and injury when dealing with demanding individuals.

Aquarius A financial opportunity will be presented if you take part in events that deal with causes that concern you. Reconnect with someone from your past.

Pisces Get the facts and prepare to act fast. An opportunity will not be available forever. Set boundaries and rules when dealing with partnerships. EUGENIA LAST
